Assistant Professor of Educational Administration

The Woodring College of Education invites dynamic and innovative individuals with cross-cultural experience to apply for a tenure-track position as Assistant Professor in Educational Administration in the Department of Educational Leadership. This is an academic year appointment with opportunity for summer employment. Teaching and supervision assignments in Educational Administration can include off-campus sites as well as the Bellingham campus.

WWU's Educational Administration Program has been active for over 50 years and remains recognized as one of the finest in Washington State; it offers a Master of Education degree and prepares principal and superintendent certificate candidates for school and district-level leadership positions. It consistently graduates the largest number of school principal candidates of all the state's public universities. Committed to the creation of an inclusive, supportive community of learners, Woodring College of Education seeks leaders in their professions who have experience working in culturally diverse communities and schools and who have the ability to contribute to the creation of a more just and inclusive society. Under the leadership of its Dean, the faculty, staff, and students of Woodring College of Education are pursuing a shared vision to "foster community relationships and a culture of learning that advance knowledge, embrace diversity, and promote social justice." We welcome applications from diverse applicants.

Faculty at Western Washington University enjoy a balance of teaching, scholarship, and service in a university that is nationally ranked as one of the top among regional universities in the nation. With approximately 15,000 students, WWU is located in beautiful Bellingham, close to both the Cascade range and the Pacific coast; it is midway between Seattle, Washington and Vancouver, British Columbia. Western Washington University was rated one of the best places to work in 2011.
