“Integrating the Healthcare Delivery Supply Chain”

By Professor David Dobrzykowski

October 7, 2010

When we think about Supply Chain Management (SCM), we often conjure to the thoughts of traditional manufacturing concepts (i.e., from automotive manufacturing) which are intended to improve outcomes such as cost, quality, customer satisfaction and responsiveness.

While SCM certainly has its roots in manufacturing, many people today are interested in applying some of these concepts in healthcare with an eye toward similar improvements. We listened to Professor Dobrzykowski’s talk on “integrating the healthcare delivery supply chain” and gained a better understanding of how many SCM concepts are currently being applied in hospitals from coast to coast. He presented some of his findings from his recent research study of 190 hospitals in the opportunities in SCM and IT.

We now invite you to come and join us on November 16 for our General Meeting in Room 109, from 5:00-6:00PM, and learn from Ron Crabtree about “Lean Accounting”.
