In this course we will examine American political institutions and processes at the national level. We will discuss the context of American politics and look at how individuals and groups participate in the political system. We will also examine the behavior of political actors in government institutions and explore the making of public policy. This semester, special attention will be given to the run-up to the 2016 presidential elections.

Throughout the semester, we'll emphasize the complexity that characterizes American politics. I want you to understand political decision making and policy choices as more nuanced than a sound bite on cable television can convey. You will come to recognize that things political are rarely "black and white," and I'll try to make that lesson memorable by frequently reminding you that my favorite color is gray.

We will also be mindful of how serendipity and chance play a role in charting the course of political history and we will consider how some important changes came about in American politics as the result of unexpected events.

This course (PLSC 113) provides students with critical exposure to the methods used by social scientists in creating knowledge. Political Science 113 provides a thorough grounding in American government. It also provides a strong introduction to the discipline of political science. In this course, students gain exposure to how knowledge is generated in the social sciences through the lens of one content area, that of American government. Through material covered in the course, students gain practice in asking important questions about the political world and answering them using the methods practiced in this social science discipline.

Completion of this course fulfills a requirement in the Knowledge of the Disciplines/Social Sciences: In Knowledge of the Disciplines courses, students will Acquire introductory knowledge about the discipline.

Develop questions for inquiry that reflect an understanding of the discipline(s) in which they are asked.

Learn how knowledge is developed and disseminated in particular disciplines.

In Social Science courses, students will Acquire an understanding of social science methods and of how they are used to engage in the systematic study of society and culture.

Understand and compare formal and informal social and political structures, organizations, and institutions.

Explore and understand power relationships and the impact of social change on different groups and on society in general.

Develop an appreciation of different interpretations of contemporary issues, institutions, or structures.

Use social science methods and content to interpret and analyze data and reports in the media and to make informed decisions regarding local, national, and international issues.

Use basic social scientific research techniques to examine and present information in a clear and concise manner.

Understand the relation between qualitative and quantitative research.

These objectives will be addressed through our examination of the historical and constitutional context of American government, the evolving nature of civil liberties and civil rights, the mobilization of political participation by interest groups and political parties, the behavior of individuals in the political arena, the measurement of public opinion, the role of the media, the power and procedures of national governmental institutions and agencies, and an assessment of the processes by which domestic and foreign policy is made.

*Elections Journal

Keep up with what's happening in the 2016 presidential elections cycle. Make regular entries (once or twice a week) in a journal about the candidates and their campaigns, including poll numbers, fund raising, highlights of speeches given, debate performances, caucus and primary results, and media coverage during this pre-nomination phase. Be ready to share something you've seen or read when class discussions turn to the race for the presidency.

Your journal should include separate sections for each of the topics mentioned above, and any additional information or insights you find useful, interesting, or amusing. Entries can be hand written or typed. The important point is to follow the news about the race for the nomination and to become familiar with the candidates and with what we learn about them as well as about the electoral process from the campaign. Include personal reflections about the candidates and the process at several points throughout your journal.
